TOP 10 WAYS TO CONNECT ON VALENTINE'S DAY

It truly is "the thought" that counts.

For immediate release

Haddonfield, NJ. October 20, 2006— Relieve the pressure of Valentine's day...focus on the card. If it is truly "the thought" that counts, how about some creativity and thought with how you give vs. what you give. Please, no e-cards...and don't just pick-up any card.

Remanents founder Monica Anderson fears for the future of relationships. "I don't care how plugged in you are. Text-messaging someone 'I love you', just isn't the same" says Monica.

During the Valentine season, everyone would admit that they enjoy looking through the mail and finding a hand-written card. Even the most wired person would put down the Blackberry and raise her hand in agreement. The trouble is, so few people feel comfortable or confident putting pen to paper.

"There's no shame. It's always been hard for people to share their feelings," says Monica. "Hence the whole Cyrano de Bergerac story. Technology has just added to our problem."

To help stimulate your inner romantic, here are some ideas for using greeting cards or notes and simple greetings to write inside:

Top 10 ways to connect...

Leave a card...

1. On their pillow...*being with you is a dream
2. Send it to their office...there is no work in loving you
3. In their cereal...I am hungry for you...let's have dinner tonight
4. On the dashboard of their car...you drive me wild
5. In the medicine cabinet...*you are my best medicine
6. In their luggage, in their shoe...I will miss shoe
7. With their bills...please pay attention to me
8. In their book club book...you always read me the right way
9. In their suit pocket...we are suited for each other
10. In their gym bag...I am hot (and sweaty) for you
